Lenora shook her head.

All that I ever heard was the opening of the door. All that I ever naw was that pair of hands. One night I fancied—but that must have been a dream!

"You fancied what?" the professor persisted.

"That I saw a pair of eyes giaring at me." Lenora replied, "eyes without any human body. I know that I ran round the room, calling out. When I dared to look wgain there was nothing there." The professor signed as he turned

The professor sighed as he turned away.

"It is evident, I am afraid," he said, "that Miss Lenora's evidence will help no one. As an expert in these affairs, Mr. Quest, does it not seem to you that her imprisonment was just a little purposeless? There seems to have been no attempt to harm her in any way."

"Whoever took the risk of abducting her," Quest pointed out grimly, "did it for a purpose would probably have become developed in course of time. However we look at it, Mr. Ashleigh, there was only one man who must have been anxious to get her out of the way, and that man was Craig."

The professor's manner betrayed some excitement.

"That's due of the troubles we are up against," Quest admitted. "We have to remember this, though. The brain that planned the two murders here, that stole and restored Mrs. Itheinholdt's jewels, that sends us those little hillets-doux from time to time, is quite capable of finding a will out of a jerry-built garage."

The professor suffed. He turned once more to Lenora.

"Young Lady," he said, "I will ask you this. I do not wish to seem obstinate in my refusal to accept Craig's stinate in my refusal to accept Craig's guilt as proved, but I would like to put this simple question to you. Did he seem to you to be possessed of supreme courage or marvelous intelli-gence?"

Lenora smiled very faintly.

"I am afraid," she replied, "that this time I'll have to satisfy the professor. He was white and trembling all the time, I thought him an arrant coward."

The professor smiled beautifully as

The professor smiled beautifully as he gianced around.

"You hear what Miss Lenora says?" I ask you whether a man who even knew the meaning of the word fear could have carried out these ghastly crimes?"

"I have known cases." Quest observed, where the most cold-blooded criminals in the world have been stricken with the most deadly fear when it has come to a question of any personal danger. You will agree with us that, regarded from any angle, THIS SALE ECLIPSES ANY OF OUR PREVIOUS EFFORTS.

The many women who will share in the economies this sale affords will have reason to remember "The Big Store" most agreeably for many a day to come. These dresses are the samples and surplus stocks of a very prominent maker who enjoys a national reputation for the exceptional smartness of the styles and the unusual excellence of the materials and workmanship that his product represents.

Being anxious to clear his racks and cases of all remaining Spring dresses before starting on his extensive line of white Summer dresses, he sold them to us at a great price concession. Every one of these dresses has been made with the greatest care; draped and individually fitted on models. They differ from high-cost custom-made gowns only in the price. Fastidious dressers, who have a keen appreciation of beautiful styles, will revel in this comprehensive assemblage of handsome modes, for here every dress fancy may be most satisfactorily supplied. The materials most sanctioned by fashion are represented:

Pussy Willow; Plain, Changeable and Checked Taffeta; Faille Silk; Plain, Striped and Checked Crepe de Chine; Rich Satins; Crepe Meteor; Charmeuse; Pompadour Brocaded Silks; Shantung, also Georgette Crepe; Chiffon and
